Palouse Falls State Park

Located just over 2 hours of Canyon River Ranch is Palouse Falls State Park. It is one of the last active waterfalls carved by the Ice Age flood path. The Palouse River runs through a narrow cataract and drops 200 feet to a churning bowl. From there, the current moves swiftly, through a winding gorge of columnar basalt, to its southern end at the mighty Snake River. There are three different viewpoints from which you can view the waterfall, along with 94 acres in the park to explore. There are also interpretive panels throughout the park about the Ice Age floods and the creation of the canyon.
